Bulgaria's Solid Start: A Buzz Interview with Dimitar Kaldamukov of KDBM Law

By Andrija Djonovic (January 18, 2024)

After a few years of political struggle, Bulgaria seems to be on a good path, with interesting legislative updates on the horizon and promising M&A activity levels, spurred primarily by strong activity in the energy and IT sectors, according to KDBM Law Founding Partner Dimitar Kaldamukov.

Consequently, he reports that Bulgaria is “rapidly advancing towards a renewable energy market.”

Focusing on IT, Kaldamukov says that Bulgaria has “long been a regional IT hub, but the market has recently become over-saturated. The influx of Ukrainian specialists has introduced more competition, leading to a cooling down of the software labor market,” he explains. Having these two sectors in mind, Kaldamukov reports this is precisely where most M&A activity has taken place. “We anticipate more M&A in software, particularly in outsourcing, and further development in renewable energy installations.”

“It’s been a challenging period,” Kaldamukov begins, alluding to the political turmoil Bulgaria experienced in the past several years. “However, the formation of a coalition between the two biggest parties, both pro-liberal and pro-EU, has brought much-needed stability – this political and legal reinforcement has significantly boosted investor confidence.”

Building on these confidence levels, Kaldamukov reports a surge in foreign investments. “Last year was pivotal,” he says. “The influx of investments coincided with the EU Resilience and Recovery Plan, injecting billions of euros into our economy.” According to him, this is also partly because of Bulgaria’s transition from a coal-based to a renewable energy economy. “We hit record levels in renewable energy, with a significant portion of our energy now coming from renewable sources.”

Turning his attention to recent legislative matters of note, Kaldamukov focuses on the recent entry of the country into the Schengen area. “This is a significant milestone yet still a complex issue,” he says. “While it’s a political and legal success, it has sparked debate. The majority of Bulgarians travel by car, and Schengen checks will primarily affect road travel,” he explains. “Regardless, it’s a step forward for Bulgaria.”

Additionally, Kaldamukov reports that he expects an imminent “implementation of the EU FDI regulations. This will introduce a new regime for investments above a certain threshold, significantly impacting the market.” He also adds that “anti-money laundering laws are becoming stricter, getting fully in line with EU rules, complicating foreign investment and company registration processes.” ●

Legislation Elves Busy in Romania: A Buzz Interview with Alina Radu of NNDKP Romania

By Andrija Djonovic (January 19, 2024)

Over this winter season, Romania has seen substantial legal changes to various aspects of its wider legal framework – from FDI and competition to consumer protection and taxation – according to Nestor Nestor Diculescu Kingston Petersen Partner Alina Radu.

“The winter months have been particularly active in terms of legal changes,” Radu begins. “The main areas affected are the foreign direct investments framework, competition, taxation, and consumer protection. Each of these areas has seen substantial amendments for the legal environment in Romania,” she outlines.

To begin with, Radu elaborates that the “European regulation on the screening of FDIs in the union has been a significant driver starting from 2022. Recently, Romania amended its legislation to require all foreign investments above EUR 2 million to undergo screening,” she reports. Somewhat surprisingly, she notes that “this includes investments from both EU and non-EU entities. Additionally, there’s a new screening tax of EUR 10,000, refundable if the notification wasn’t necessary – it’s a considerable change, including in the merger control aspect of competition law.”

Moving on, Radu delves into the changes to the competition law framework. “In competition law, the major modification concerns the attorney-client privilege. Previously applied by default, it now requires clients to justify the privileged character of their correspondence with attorneys,” she explains. “This change is currently a topic of debate and may face constitutional court scrutiny.”

Moreover, Radu reports significant changes to the taxation framework, especially concerning fiscal legislation. “Businesses with a turnover higher than EUR 50 million must now pay the greater between 16% of their profit or 1% of their turnover in tax. Another crucial development is the implementation of electronic invoicing, requiring all invoices to be issued and stored in a centralized system monitored by tax authorities,” she says. “This move, while technologically advanced, poses challenges for businesses in terms of compliance and potential blockages in the system,” she opines.

When it comes to consumer protection legislation, Radu reports that the “implementation of the Directive 2020/1828 for the protection of collective consumer interests is particularly noteworthy.” It enables certain qualified entities to file legal actions on behalf of consumers against abusive practices in various industries. “This year, we expect to see the formation of these entities, which will significantly impact how consumer rights are defended,” she says.

Finally, she touches upon renewable energy as one of the hottest sectors in Romania right now. “Renewable energy is becoming increasingly important in Romania. We’re seeing a lot of investor interest in this sector, as well as banks’ interest in financing renewable energy projects,” she reports. “It’s an area ripe for development and will likely see substantial activity this year,” Radu concludes with optimism. ●

North Macedonia's Road to the EU Is Paved with Legislation: A Buzz Interview with Tanja Polenak of the Polenak Law Firm

Andrija Djonovic (January 22, 2024)

While the legal landscape in North Macedonia might be somewhat stagnant – due to 2024 being an election year – there are still challenging complexities to the judicial reforms on the table, as well as struggles with consistency and knowledge, according to Polenak Law Firm Partner Tanja Polenak.

“It’s an election year in North Macedonia and things are pretty static,” Polenak begins. “North Macedonia continues to face significant challenges in the rule of law. Despite numerous laws passed to align with European standards, there’s a gap in their proper enforcement and implementation,” she explains.

Polenak reports there have been certain developments in the judicial system that caused some ripples. “There are issues in the operation of the Judicial Council, and there is a need to oppose any external influence in the justice system, as assessed by the European Commission’s latest Report. We faced controversial amendments to the Criminal Code that affected the prosecution of high-profile cases, which is a concern.” In addition, there has been movement towards overall judicial transparency with court decisions now being published online. “Publishing court decisions online, though not a source of law per se, is a positive step towards transparency. However, our work remains complicated due to a lack of consistency and predictability in the rulings,” she posits.

Overall, the North Macedonian legal system still seems to be having some issues with the uncertainty it causes, both for the public and for the business sector. “The prevailing uncertainty undermines the credibility of the judicial system among the population,” Polenak stresses. “The Chambers of Commerce are vocal in their criticism of the status quo, and demand strengthening the rule of law to improve the business environment and willingness of potential clients to engage in due process.” The state of affairs is not made any easier with a noticeable decline in well-trained lawyers. “We’re facing a shortage of skilled lawyers, partly due to diminishing law school quality. Additionally, young people are less inclined to pursue legal careers,” she continues. “Many young lawyers are leaving the market for better opportunities elsewhere, some even taking a job in other professions.”

Taking stock of foreign investments in the country, however, Polenak sees an opportunity. “Foreign investors bring a more structured approach, positively impacting the legal processes within companies,” she says. “Their presence has been educational for in-house lawyers, improving legal services when compared to the past.”

Finally, focusing on specific areas of the legislative landscape, Polenak reports that “employment law, particularly regarding foreigners, is quite challenging. While neighboring countries simplify procedures, North Macedonia lags behind.” According to her, “the new labor legislation draft aims to clarify existing ambiguities, but there are concerns about its effectiveness.” Ultimately, Polenak feels there is a “pressing need for judicial reform, better alignment between institutions, and enhanced training.” Still, she concludes on an optimistic note, saying that she feels that “North Macedonia’s potential EU accession will revitalize the legal profession and make it more appealing.” ●

2024 May Be More of the Same, but Hungary Is Ready for It: A Buzz Interview with Laszlo Hajdu of HP Legal

Andrija Djonovic (January 26, 2024)

With Hungary's economic and legal outlook plugged into global uncertainties and no shortage of those, two market sectors still stand out in terms of potential – energy and agriculture – according to HP Legal Partner Laszlo Hajdu, who, looking at the fundamentals, shares an optimistic view of the country's future.

“The global economic landscape this year seems to be predominantly influenced by three major factors: the ongoing war in Ukraine, tensions in the Middle East, and the upcoming US elections,” Hajdu begins. “These events are pivotal and their developments are crucial to monitor as they hold significant sway over the global economy, and, consequently, our country.”

Focusing on Hungary, Hajdu says that he is “quite optimistic” about its market. “Specifically, two sectors show great potential – energy and agriculture. There's a positive momentum in the energy sector, particularly with the introduction of important legislation aimed at boosting renewables like wind projects and energy storage projects,” he explains. “This shift is largely a strategic move to reduce our dependency on Russian energy.” Moreover, he is of the view that “this is a positive direction and reflects the government's proactive approach to diversifying energy sources.” Additionally, he says that, in the agriculture sector, “there are several promising green-field development projects in the pipeline, which indicates a healthy level of activity in this sector.”

In terms of the Hungarian M&A mid-market, Hajdu does not expect significant growth in the number of transactions compared to 2023, because yield expectations are still too high. Therefore, he says, “there is a notable trend of Hungarian businesses expanding abroad.”

Hajdu then reports that the banking and finance sector in Hungary is closely aligning itself with the developments in the energy and agriculture sectors. “There are already several financing deals in the pipeline,” he says. “The direction looks promising, especially with the government's support. The national bank's decisions on interest rates will also play a crucial role in enhancing lending activity.”

Hajdu also highlights a particular legislative movement: “One notable aspect is the introduction of government pre-emption rights on certain transactions,” he says. “This has been viewed differently by market players; some see it as a major obstacle, while others don't perceive it as a significant hindrance,” he explains.

Ultimately, Hajdu adds that he expects the “legal sector in Hungary is likely to remain stable, similar to last year. Despite macroeconomic challenges, this year could be a period of consolidation. The struggles of last year are likely to stabilize, which should be beneficial for the legal market overall.” ●

Albania Positions Itself for Growth: A Buzz Interview with Alban Shanaj of Tashko Pustina

By Andrija Djonovic (January 24, 2024)

Albania breaks new ground in its energy and financial sectors as it moves towards renewable energy and market liberalization, while significant changes are afoot in payment services and tax law, according to Tashko Pustina Partner Alban Shanaj, all of which point squarely toward a coming period of dynamic growth and opportunity.

“We’re witnessing an important milestone in Albania’s energy landscape,” Shanaj begins. “The Albanian Ministry of Infrastructure and Energy has recently awarded capacity to three bidders, totaling 222.48 megawatts for the country’s first onshore wind power plants. In addition, the Albanian Government has launched a new renewable energy auction aiming to construct 300 megawatts of PV power plants. Combined with the previous two PV auctions, these recent developments mark a departure from our traditional reliance on hydropower and align with the country’s 2030 renewable energy targets set out by the Energy Community,” he explains. “Supported by the EBRD, these projects, totaling overall more than 760 megawatts, are reshaping our energy production.”

Shanaj reports that the country is “undergoing a significant liberalization process of the wholesale and retail market, shifting towards a market-based power sector. A pivotal moment was the successful ‘go live’ of the day ahead by the Albanian Power Exchange (ALPEX).” Furthermore, he says that, “from January 2024, over 2104 businesses connected to the 20-kilovolt distribution grid have begun transitioning to the liberalized market. We’re assisting some of them in finding solutions for their electricity needs, both short and long-term,” he adds.

Shifting gears to finance, Shanaj says that the “payment services sector has undergone transformative changes. The Parliament oversaw a law on payment services in 2020, based on the PSD2, aiming to liberalize the payment services market and provide simpler solutions for customers. This law, in force since 2021, has been completed by regulations adopted by the Bank of Albania.” According to him, “a key regulation coming into effect this January focuses on enhancing strong customer authentication and adopting a fully open and secure communication standard which opens up exciting opportunities for both tech companies and traditional banks in open banking and payment services.”

In addition, Shanaj reports that the taxation framework has also undergone an overhaul. “A crucial law has recently entered into force, as of January 2024, tackling income tax, significantly altering how businesses and professions are taxed.” This law impacts both the business income and employment income tax. “One of the notable changes is the different taxable income for individuals based on their income sources: employment income or business,” Shanaj explains. “This law also introduces a qualification as employment income for income generated by self-employed persons if such income derives 80% from one customer or 90% from up to two customers, respectively. In addition, the new law also introduces a special regime for small businesses, with a threshold of around EUR 100,000 in annual income, offering them beneficial tax conditions.”

Finally, looking ahead, Shanaj expects a dynamic period in the immediate future. “There will be new opportunities, especially in energy sales, as we adapt to these market changes. Our role as legal advisors is to navigate these evolving landscapes, ensuring that our clients are well-positioned to capitalize on these opportunities,” he stresses in conclusion. ●

Immigration Reimagined in Serbia: A Buzz Interview with Damjan Despotovic of DNVG

Andrija Djonovic (January 30, 2024)

Serbia has been hard at work implementing extensive revisions to its immigration laws – merging the work and residency permits, for example – producing both timely results and temporary issues, according to DNVG Attorneys Partner Damjan Despotovic.

“Starting February 1, Serbia has implemented a completely revised procedure for granting residency and work permits,” Despotovic begins. “This marks a move towards liberalizing immigration, albeit not radically. The changes are partly technical but significant in facilitating the process,” he says.

One of the key novelties, Despotovic continues, is the “elimination of separate work permits. Instead, we now have a joint permit that allows foreigners to both reside and work in Serbia. This is a significant simplification, merging two processes into one,” he explains. “Additionally, this permit will now be issued electronically, which is a new approach for us.”

Considering such a new system, he reports there exists a “mix of curiosity and anxiety about it – we’re transitioning to a completely different way of working, and the authorities are currently in a bit of disarray adapting to these changes.” The electronic application system isn’t fully set up yet, but Despotovic does feel that it promises greater efficiency. “For example, the processing time is expected to shrink from two months to just 15 days,” he adds.

Additionally, Despotovic indicates that the permit’s longer validity – now valid for three years instead of one – is a “very beneficial change, especially for those planning longer stays in Serbia. It reduces the bureaucratic hassle of annual renewals, providing a more stable situation for immigrants.” Moreover, the “joint permit will now be a personalized ID with chips, enhancing security and functionality, and there is also a provision for temporary residency aimed at those who seek to stay in Serbia for reasons other than work, like family reunification, students, real estate investors, and those investing in or establishing innovative technology companies in Serbia,” he outlines.

However, all is not smooth sailing – when it comes to regulating digital nomads, the law is less clear cut. “The law hasn’t specifically addressed digital nomads – which is a growing segment in immigration inquiries. While they must apply for a joint permit as self-employed, the government now has the provision to create exceptional situations for foreigners to work on temporary residency, potentially accommodating digital nomads in the future,” Despotovic explains.

Finally, Despotovic also reports that it is expected that, starting on March 1, the “citizens of North Macedonia and Albania can work in Serbia without needing a joint permit. This is a result of multilateral treaties and signifies a major step in regional cooperation,” he says. Ultimately, this slew of employment legislation updates is a good thing, Despotovic says, especially given the recent turmoil in the IT sector. “There were numerous redundancies announced, particularly in the IT industry. This is a relevant issue for big companies and a frequent subject among lawyers and business professionals – it’s something we’re dealing with daily,” he notes in conclusion. ●

[There exists a] mix of curiosity and anxiety about it – we’re transitioning to a completely different way of working, and the authorities are currently in a bit of disarray adapting to these changes. For example, the processing time is expected to shrink from two months to just 15 days.

Poland's 2024 Dance Card Already Full: A Buzz Interview with Jakub Ziolk of Crido

Andrija Djonovic (January 31, 2024)

Marked by recent political shifts, impacted by global trends, and facing many legislative changes, Poland is seeing critical updates on taxation, energy, state companies' leadership, the balance of transactions, and renewed discussions on judicial reform, according to Crido Legal Managing Partner

"Last year marked a new chapter in Polish politics with a new government," Ziolk begins. "This new government's arrival is pivotal as we're anticipating legislative proposals that will impact the legal sphere. For example, the National System of e-Invoices – which was supposed to be a mandatory system from July 1 this year, announced by the previous government for tax advisory purposes – is likely to be postponed, as per the new minister's suggestion," he explains.

Ziolk reports that "Poland has been witnessing significant trends in technology and ESG, especially in the real estate sector. These trends are global, but they manifest uniquely in Poland due to our specific legal and economic landscape," he adds. "Energy transformation is a key area – the past eight years have seen stringent regulations around on-shore wind farms. The new legislation could facilitate faster energy transformations and infrastructure development, significantly impacting the legal landscape," he explains.

Beyond legislative changes, Ziolk shares that he feels Poland to be "at a critical juncture, particularly in strategic sectors like energy and mining. The upcoming election of the management board for Polish state treasury companies suggests significant shifts," he opines. "This will entail re-organization, restructuring, and potentially a strategic shift, leading to substantial legal work."

In addition, he says that the real estate and M&A markets seem to be in a state of flux. "Currently, the European Central Bank's high interest rates are impacting these markets and there's a slowdown in core real estate and M&A transactions. However, this has led to an increase in distressed asset deals, as businesses seek opportunistic investors for refinancing," he adds. "We're seeing the first examples of this trend, and I expect it to continue well into 2024." Following up on these predictions, Ziolk adds that "if the European Central Bank lowers interest rates, we may see a resurgence in core deals. This shift could revitalize the market significantly."

Finally, he shares that there is considerable discussion about judicial reform in Poland. "This is a critical issue; to meet EU rule of law requirements, we expect changes that could unlock EU funds, especially those suspended due to concerns over judicial independence," he says. "The new government will likely introduce legislation impacting civil and criminal procedures, which could bring about structural changes in the judiciary and affect legal practice," Ziolk concludes. ●

This new government's arrival is pivotal as we're anticipating legislative proposals that will impact the legal sphere. For example, the National System of e-Invoices – which was supposed to be a mandatory system from July 1 this year, announced by the previous government for tax advisory purposes – is likely to be postponed, as per the new minister's suggestion.

2023 CEE DEALS OF THE YEAR SUBMISSIONS

CEE Legal Matters received 376 submissions for the 22 Deals of the Year Awards for 2023. Based on all these submissions, a total of 211 deals are eligible for one or (in some cases) multiple awards this year. The list of nominated deals was not included for jurisdictions with 3 or less eligible submissions as those are automatically shortlisted and will be announced on February 28.

The finalists for the 2023 Deals of the Year award in each country will be announced in March 2024, with the winners to be announced at the annual CEELM Deal of the Year Awards Banquet scheduled for April 25, 2024, in Warsaw. Save the date!

In the meantime, our thanks to everyone who submitted deals for consideration. We appreciate the time and effort you put into the process, and we – like you – are eager to see the results and celebrate the winners this spring in Warsaw. Good luck, one and all!

CEE LEGAL MATTERS 2023 TABLE OF DEALS

The CEE Legal Matters 2023 Table of Deals summarizes 1,666 client matters in Central and Eastern Europe. It was compiled using both the 1,529 matters reported by CEELM throughout 2023 and supplementary deal submissions received from law firms which, for one reason or another, were not covered during the year. In a couple of months, the table will become available in a digital version that allows for searching and sorting, with each entry linking to the relevant coverage on the CEELM website, where available.
